Researchers: Blood-Sucking Eyeworm Culprit to Quail Decline :: Texas Tech Today

Today · 5 days ago Like

Summary | The Texas Tech-led research is the largest quail disease study ever undertaken in the United States. In the summer of 2010, the Rolling Plains of West Texas expected a bumper crop of quail. Kendall said the eyeworm can range in size from about an eighth of an inch to the diameter of a penny. Once inside the birds, they move freely from eye to eye through the sinus cavity, where they suck the blood of the birds, mate and release eggs.

Texas Tech Coach Kliff Kingsbury Responds to Arkansas Fan's 'Breakup' Letter

Bleacher Report

· 4 days ago

veooz 360°

Summary | Texas Tech coach Kliff Kingsbury's resemblance to actor Ryan Gosling gets him more attention than his coaching ability, so he occasionally has to deal with female fans crushing on him. It's then up to him as to how he handles those adoring fans.

What will Kliff Kingsbury do next? Arkansas fan 'breaks up' with him; he responds with autographed photo

Dallas News · 4 days ago

veooz 360°

Summary | You can bet that Texas Tech coach Kliff Kingsbury has gotten his fair share of fan mail, but a break-up letter sent by a conflicted Arkansas fan might take the cake. Perhaps the best part of all of this is that Texas Tech hosts Arkansas on Sept. 13 at Jones AT&T Stadium. No word if the fan, identified as Pam Robles, will make the trek to Lubbock to see her ex.
